Dear Mr. Malamud,

I have been instructed to send you the following message:

"Further to the previous letter regarding this matter, it has been found that parts of the manuscript dealing with the ITU contain numerous factual errors, as well as misunderstandings and misinterpretations of situations and events. Exception has also been taken to passages in the manuscript singling out for comment individual members of the ITU staff.

We are pleased to learn from subsequent communications that you are now willing to publicly acknowledge the progress the ITU has made in providing electronic access to its publications and proceedings. We view the Internet as a particularly valuable means of promoting communication and information exchange, and look forward to working with members of the Internet community.

In spite of this, after having examined your manuscript and subsequent messages, it has been concluded that no useful purpose would be served in cooperating with the production or promotion of your book."

Yours sincerely,

Donald J. MacLean
Chief, Strategic Planning Unit
